Focus Your Career With

IEEE Electromagnetic Compatibility Society (EMC-S)

Society membership enhances the benefits you receive as an IEEE member. Network with the top minds in your field and develop the support structure you need for success in your career. Your membership connects you with innovators and practitioners around the world – people you may not otherwise meet in the course of your daily job. Society membership offers many opportunities to volunteers. Whether you volunteer to serve on technical committees, edit a journal, get involved in local and regional activities through your EMC chapter or in any other way, the experience you gain puts you on the career path for continued success.

Introducing... the EMC Society of the IEEE

The EMC Society encompasses the design, integration, testing and analysis of electrotechnology products and systems to control electromagnetic interference. It strives for EMC enhancement through the generation of engineering standards, measurement techniques, instrumentation and procedures, the study of equipment and systems characteristics, improved techniques and devices for EMI control, education in EMC and studies of the origins of interference.

The EMC Society promotes close cooperation and exchange of technical information among its members and other professional societies. To facilitate the exchange, local chapter and annual international symposia meetings are held for the presentation of papers, workshops and tutorial sessions and for the meeting of the EMC-S's various committee meetings. More than 4,000 members of the Society are active in more than 68 chapters world-wide, while several new chapters are under construction.

The EMC Society of the IEEE was founded on October 10, 1957, when the IRE approved the petition signed by 326 engineers wishing to form a Professional Group on Radio Frequency Interference. Since then, the contributions made by the EMC Society have been numerous. In 2007, the EMC Society celebrated its 50th anniversary.
